

What About the Previous Study?

In 1998 a corridor, called B5, was identified.

The B5 study did not progress to the next phase, which would have been to locate an alignment within the corridor.

The Eastern Bypass Study is not a continued refinement of the B5 corridor. Although the previous study results will be reviewed, the current Eastern Bypass Study is beginning with a “clean slate”.

A new set of reasonable corridors will be identified to be studied and compared to each other as part of the current Eastern Bypass Study. It is possible that a corridor similar to B5 could emerge as a part of that set.
